Sophie Nahum has been making documentaries for over 20 years. After working for the major French channels, notably Arte, she decided to produce her films independently.

Les Derniers project, following the "Young et moi" (2015, awarded at FIGRA), is one that she has dedicated herself entirely for the last three years. A book with the same title was published soon after.

Les Derniers is a series of short documentaries. Each episode features survivors, who share their story of the war, the life that they once had, that they once lost and that they managed, somehow, to rebuild. As there are no longer many who can testify to the concentration camps, 'Les derniers' creates a way to pass on the responsibility of further transmitting the message to generations to come. This project sheds light on these survivors' resilience, a quality that we should all embrace in our lives.

The program will consist of a screening of two of the project's testimonies, followed by a Q&A session.
